FlexSim is capable of simulating real-world traffic for all road user groups simultaneously, FlexSim has the ability to simulate complex intersections and roundabouts, including modified signal phases and changes in direction. FlexSim can simulate signals and stop signs and undertake the assignment of a speed at busy junctions. FlexSim is capable of simulating pedestrians, the disabled, cyclists and other road users. FlexSim is also capable of simulating in-vehicle and out-of-vehicle communications and can include route selection, traffic signs and lane markings. Traffic volumes can be grouped into discrete volumes in order to simulate congestion on a per-vehicle or per-group basis. FlexSim is also capable of representing traffic from major turning movements and deliberate signals, as well as non-road vehicles. These features mean that FlexSim could be used in the road design process to simulate traffic volumes, road capacity and travel time and can be used to validate traffic management strategies, such as road safety campaigns or reduction of speed. FlexSim is also capable of simulating batch processes, including queues of many thousands of vehicles. FlexSim is also capable of simulating routes, although at the time of writing Autodesk do not offer a mechanism for customers to design their own custom network, which would enable d0c515b9f4

In this invention a mixture of alkenes and alkynes is continuously passed through a reaction zone. The system is conveniently operated with high yields of aldehyde and ketone, while the amide is deposited on the catalyst or in the reaction vessel wall. It is known to prepare aldehydes and ketones by the reaction of an aliphatic alkene and an aliphatic alkynoic acid ester with one another in the presence of a catalyst (cf. U.S. Pat. No. 2,553,542). Apart from this, it is also known to produce alkadiene intermediates from aliphatic alkene and aliphatic alkynoic acid ester by the W
