To describe an Australian family in which four affected members have early-onset non-convulsive status epilepticus; generalized tonic-clonic seizures (GTCS), developmental disorders and optic atrophy. A five-generation family was investigated to search for a genetic cause of the epilepsy. High resolution DNA linkage analysis with three microsatellite markers confirmed linkage to chromosome 9p13-21.02. No candidate genes were identified by exon sequencing. Histological examination of the brain and optic nerves showed atrophy of brain and nerve cells. We propose the name of epileptic encephalopathy 9 (EEC9) for this disorder. Affected individuals should be investigated for developmental disorders, and neuroimaging to exclude optic atrophy should be performed in children with early-onset GTCS who have normal development.
