Description If you start a new game beginning in Episode 2, this unlocks the ability to play as the monarch's consort, rather than as the monarch's lover. Game "Braveland" Gameplay: Details First off, if you experience any "Failsafe Mode" issues, do not apply patches! Don't install the mod itself if you have an existing save game! There are files that can overwrite your previous save files and they won't be fixed until they're replaced with your custom files. This mod fixes the issues that were present in Episode 2: In Episode 2, you were told you have to wait until after the mothership is finished researching to leave, even if you completed all sidequests in the first episode. This patch overrides the mothership-complete logic and will instantly unlock you in the first episode. The "freedom" of the new planet "Braveland" does not count towards the completion of the mothership, nor does a "Failsafe Mode" occur if you complete the mothership on Braveland. The Battleaxe is lost forever and will never be able to be reassembled, so you should spend this "extra" souls on the remaining skills. There is more than enough text and dialogue to read while you are away from your girlfriends to complete this mod, so don't worry if it stops your game from loading. You won't lose any of your progress. I made this mod so that you can start a new game and get back to the first episode without having to keep all of your progress from before. Hope you like it! Features: Unlocks "freedom" and immediately allows you to start Episode 2 Removes the "Failsafe Mode" that occurred at the end of Episode 1 Skills and Artifacts: The "Braveland" orb will be permanently lost, so you should use this soul on healing and the remaining "power" orbs to earn more experience. What's new:

has been my home since 1990. As I see my life so clearly, it is amazing to me as it is so closed to reality in so many ways. As much as the world changes and improves, one way that I feel has changed for the worse is the way people treat and look at each other in general. America is becoming less and less hospitable to all races, ethnic groups, and sexual orientations. We live in a society which has reached a pinnacle of material want and just greed, leaving behind a veil of shame and stigma of an alternative point of view. In order to fit in to the society, everyone is forced to follow the same direction, either via government laws and corporations or by peer pressure. We are then forced to live in a "human zoo", where even our private thoughts and our free time are being monitored. The controllers (mostly corporations, but increasingly the federal government) use various methods to effect the populations. Now, it used to be that the only method was putting laws in place to control the population. Now you just regulate culture as well. For example, in my hometown of RVA, everyone and their grandmother is allowed to work for some type of development project, even if the development project is legally taking away all of our rights, including our homes. We used to have our own private homes, yards, and we were allowed to be alone, free of all governmental regulations. Now, if you don't live within 200 feet from another human being, you are subject to arrest and possible fines based upon your own sanity. Most Christians are fighting this battle, but it is so complex that most people simply don't agree on how to battle the problems. The Christian strongholds are usually small groups, and they keep the immoral power structure away from hiding. Most people I know are now using a third party on the "to do list" that does an excellent job representing all aspects of this struggle, but I want to highlight two institutions which are in a key position to help run the counter to this trend. First, is Oakwood schools, and also The Regent School. These schools have been my home since I was in nursery school and high school. This is where the real battlefield is being fought out in our community, and they have also been fighting the same fight for many decades. Oakwood elementary students with their grandparents. Oakwood has been an integral part of my home, and they are a secular
