When I try to read the Boolean file I am unable to read it correctly I am using the below code to read the file booleanFile = new FileInputStream(new File(filePath)); //booleanFile = new FileInputStream(new File(filePath)); BufferedReader br = new BufferedReader(new InputStreamReader(booleanFile)); while((c = br.read()) != -1){ //test = br.read(); //System.out.println(test); //System.out.println("read" + c); } br.close(); for some reason, if the file contains False, the console is printing the wrong information. But when the file contains true it is printing correctly. Why is that happening? The Boolean file is created as below 0 1 A: The problem is not with the encoding per se, but with the fact that your file contains only one line of text. Put the single line of text (the text representing the boolean value of the field) between two newlines and it should read it as an encoded string. This is a textual representation of the process of binary representation. If you really want a binary representation, you need to look b7e8fdf5c8
