We have studied whether the pattern of prostaglandin metabolism in the blood of alcoholics is altered in comparison with that of control subjects. The prostaglandin metabolites, namely, 2,3-dinor-6-keto-prostaglandin F1 alpha and 2,3-dinor-6-keto-prostaglandin F2 alpha, were isolated and quantitated by reverse-phase high performance liquid chromatography and radioimmunoassay in plasma from 14 abstinent male alcoholics, their matched controls and from 20 healthy male volunteers. The alcoholics had significantly higher levels of 2,3-dinor-6-keto-prostaglandin F1 alpha, a metabolite which is formed from prostaglandin H2 in a similar manner to the corresponding cyclooxygenase product of arachidonic acid metabolism, than their healthy matched controls. It was also significantly higher in the plasma of all alcoholic patients than in that of the control subjects. This data supports our previous hypothesis that alcoholics have an increased rate of arachidonic acid metabolism through cyclooxygenase to prostaglandin H2 pathway.Welcome To Good Life Learning Centre Our mission is to inspire those who visit us with the belief that a life dedicated to learning is a good life. The silencing effect of impaired sleep on fear conditioning is mediated by the medial prefrontal cortex and anterior cingulate cortex. Impaired sleep may result in memory impairment. In this study, we aimed to observe whether the sleep-impaired contextual fear conditioning (CFC) would lead to changes in the fMRI scanning data in the medial prefrontal cortex (mPFC) and anterior cingulate cortex (ACC) of the sleep-impaired group, as well as the potential role of the mPFC and ACC in the formation of the sleep-impairment-associated memory impairment. Sleep duration was manipulated by using a sleep-restricted protocol in which one night of sleep was restricted to 4-6 h, and then was compared with 6-8 h of sleep in a normal environment. fMRI was used to measure the activated regions in the mPFC and ACC during the CFC training in the impaired and normal groups. In this study, the results showed that sleep duration in the impaired group was significantly lower than that in the normal group (p
