Patients with IBD are currently poorly served by the health system in Norway. A Norwegian guideline was developed, based on literature, and consensus to provide recommendations for nursing care of these patients. The aim was to evaluate its implementation and assess to what extent nursing staff in outpatient gastroenterology care follow the guideline. A conceptually-based case study design. Ten participants were included. Semi-structured interviews with a think-aloud method were conducted to explore the respondents' reasoning process. Content analysis was used to explore the guideline. Nurses viewed the guideline positively, but expressed a need for more practical recommendations and a more thorough explanation of the guideline. They also expressed a need for a more concrete evaluation and more communication with physicians. I am the husband of Bethany and the father of Jordan.
