The New Jersey chapter of the Sierra Club says in a lawsuit filed Monday that despite its long history of promoting clean energy, the state has favored certain interests over other energy sources.

The lawsuit challenges the future Burlington County plant's ability to draw natural gas from the Marcellus Shale formation in Pennsylvania. The chamber of commerce in Mayport, which supports the plant, has promoted the incentive package, saying it encourages lower energy prices. The Sierra Club's lawsuit was first reported Tuesday by Politico New Jersey.A thermal head, a thermal printing apparatus and a facsimile apparatus may be cited as an example of information recording apparatuses that record information on recording media by thermal transfer. The thermal head used in these apparatuses is arranged on a carriage to be movable in a main scanning direction relative to a recording medium that is to be supplied with heat from the thermal head, and is a heat generator that generates heat. When a voltage is applied to the thermal head, the heat generator generates heat, and the heat received from the heat generator is transferred to the recording medium and causes a color change in the area which receives heat. Here, in a case where the electric power is supplied to the thermal head, it is desirable that the heat generator is stabilized at a target temperature. For this purpose, the thermal head has a temperature detection element, which detects the temperature of the heat generator, and controls the electric power that is supplied to the heat generator based on the detection signal obtained from the temperature detection element, so that the heat generator may be stabilized at the target temperature. In the prior art, the target temperature is set at a high temperature as compared with the temperature of the heat generator when the power supply to the heat generator is turned on. The reason for this is that a stable temperature is obtained with the high temperature. Accordingly, in a case where the thermal transfer recording apparatus is used for a long period of time, the thermal transfer ribbon and the recording medium, which have been heated by the thermal head, may be de 6d1f23a050
